JUDGE WYLIE'S CHARGE

His Address to the Jury in the Case of Flinder and McElfresh.

The History of the Case Shows That There is Something Wrong.

Whether It Can Be Cured by the Courts ro Will Require Legislation is a Problem.

A Verdict of Acquittal the Natural Result of the Charge.

The charge delivered by Judge Wylle in the criminal court on Thursday in the case of McElfresh and Flinder has excited so much comment that it is given in full below. A prominent citizen said yesterday that if it was good law all the cases against the exdetectives might as well be abandoned, and the labors of the citizens' committee to free the city from the depredations of thieves and corrupt officials will have been in vain.

Judge Wylie said:

Judge Wylie said:

Gentlemen of the jury, these two defendants are indicted for receiving stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, or stolen property, as was in this case—a watch, knowing it to have been stolen. It appears to me that there are some facts in this case which are established by the evidence beyond all controversy. One of these facts is that Mr. Jos. Baumer had this watch: that he was the owner of it, and that it was stolen from him.

Another fact in the case is not disputed, that the thief was a fellow by the name of Smith or Smithie.

Another undisputed fact is that a south or smithing the stolen is not disputed.

thief was a fellow by the name of Smith or Smithie.

Another undisputed fact is that Smith sold this watch to Tom Donohue and that Donohue paid him for the watch $50. The conclusion from the law on these facts would be inevitable, irresistible as to Donohue, that Donohue was a receiver of stolen property knowing itto have been stolen. There cannot be any doubt as to Donohue. We find this watch in this way in Donohue's hand. Then we find that on the very morning after the watch was stolen that Baumer advertised his loss and offered a reward of $100 for the return of the watch was stolen that Baumer advertised his loss and offered a reward of $100 for the return of the watch was to seen that McElfresh called at Donohue's and made some reference to the advertisement appears, it seems that McElfresh called at Donohue's and made some reference to the advertisement of a reward for a lost watch. According to McElfresh's story, not much was said about it. According to McElfresh's story, there was no transfer of the possession of the watch from Donohue to him. According to Donohue's story, he (Donohue) handed over the watch to McElfresh for the purpose of enabling him to secure the reward. You will have to decide between this conflicting evidence.

You have on the one side Donohue, an acknowl-

Tou have on the one side Donohue, an acknowledged thief, who seems to glory in his business and it his connection with the stolen property in this case, and McEifresh, the defendant, is the other. You will have to decide on the weight of evident of the weight of evident of the weight of evident in your opinion, you need go no further. If you are of opinion that Donahue lied as to that matter, or, if you have a reasonable doubt as to the truth of his statement on that point, you need not trouble your-elves with the rest of this case; because the possession of the stolen property there terminated with Donahue and as worthy of belief; that he is curroborated in some respects in this case. Probably he is. But here is the vital point in the case. Here is the heart of the prosecution right at this point, and it is for you to say whether you have such undoubted confidence in the truth of the statement of this witness, Donohue, as will lead you to find a who simply that the statement of this witness, Donohue, as will lead you to find a who simply that the statement of this witness, Donohue, as will lead you to find a wind the statement of this witness, Donohue, as will lead you to find a wind the statement of the statement of the prosecution right at this point, and it is for you to say wheeler you have reasonable doubt as to the truth of Donohue's statement upon that rout, you need not go further—you are bound to find a vertice of acquittal.

If you believe McEifresh as to that point, then the question arises whether the surrender of the stolen property by Donohue to McEifresh in that point, then the question arises whether the surrender of the stolen are property of the stolen property as would, knowing it to be stolen, justify you in readering a verdict of guilty.

Now what is the situation? The law requires that where stolen property is received with a guestion arises whether the surrender of the property to the owner, asking for the return of the property to the owner, asking for the return of the property of the

There is another consequence that arises from There is another class of industry that has been

That,

There is another class of industry that has been started in the community, in which quite a number are engaged. They are the persons who stand between the receiver of the stolen property and the man who has lost his property. These are the men who are the go-betweens; they are very often. I am sorry to say—at least that is the Impression—official detectives who are engaged in that business, and more especially private detectives.

As long as these parties negotiate with the receiver of stolen goods and the owner, it is clear that under the law they are not liable as receivers of stolen goods. If a detective engages in that business, he is undoubtedly failse to his trust. If a private detective engages in that business as a general thing he is very apt also to be corrupt. It is a business, however, that crows. It abpeals to the avarice; it appeals to his love of money that belongs to human nature. The reason why engaging in that business is more objectionable on the part of the official detective is this; That it places them on the wrong side in this controversy between the commission of the crime and the detection of the property. But when they engage in this commerce with the "lence" men, assist the "lence" men in disposing rewards with "ence" men, is harring the profits, then it becomes to the interest of the detectives that crime should be committed that crime should be increased; because the more crimes of this character that are committed that erime should be forced and received the more property will be given to the "fance" man; the more rewards that are offered and received the more is the profit of the detective functions of the detective man; the more rewards that are offered and received the more is the profit of the detective functions as the profit of the detective function of the property will be given to the "fance" man; the more rewards that are offered and received the more is the profit of the detective functions.

and received the more is the profit of the detective increased.

So, that it will inevitably result, must result, in this: As long as human nature is what we know it is among men of this kind, that the detectives, whose business it is to protect the community from the commission of zrime, are the men who initiate the robbernes and commit the crimes, so that they may participate in the profits.

Whether we can break that up or not either by the power of the courts or new legislation, is a thing that is to be tried. Certainly there ought to be some means or ablished by the law and carried into effect by the court to place the class of men whose duty it is to protect the community from the commission of crime beyond the reach of temptations of this character. They ought not to be in league with the thieves. Their interests ought to be on the other side, and thay ought to degree of the continual property of the control of the property would cease to offer rewards for the recovery of their property, all this would be swept our of the way. If there were no rewards offered for the restoration of property, there would be no temptation for the officers to desert their duty. On the contrary, their interest then would be on the side of the community for the detection of crims.

But, so long as persons lose until property and offer rewards for its restoration, those rewards are a temptation to the public officials engaged in the detection of crime to divert their duty and to join the party of thieves and depredators on society. But this is somewhat of a diversion, I have passed the point where I rested this case upon the question whether you believed Donohue or McElfresh in regard to the delivery of the watch, and had said to you that it you believed McElfresh in redard to the delivery of the watch, and had said to you that it you believed McElfresh in received the watch from Donohue, there was end of this indictment.

The next question, which I began to consider before making this digression, was this: Whether, if Douohue's story be true, and the watch was delivered to McElfresh for the purpose of enabling McElfresh to return the watch to its owner and secure the reward which the owner had advertised, whether that was such a possession of stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, as would render him liable to this indictment. My opinion is that it was not. Such a possession as that would be merely for the purpose of returning to the owner on his own terms his goods that were stolen—on terms which he had himself advertised.

There is a third view of this case that possibly to the owner on his own terms his goods that were stolen—on terms which he had himself advertised.

There is a third view of this case that possibly there might be some evidence looking to the support of, although not much. If it were a fact that McEifresh and Flinder were in collusion or in confidence with Donohus before this crime of s'calling the watch was committed, a general confederacy, with Donohus as a fence, who, it is understood, should bury stolen property, and in case of reward being offered, that the detectives should take the projecty to the owner and secure the offered reward, paying Donohus what the property cost him, with a profit on it. distributing the balance between themselves, that would be such a confederacy as would make the possession of Donohus their possession. If we should find such a case as that, we should not hesitate to hold McEifresh and Flinder both, under such an indictment as this, as the actual receivers of stolen goods, because when a man is in a confederacy with others to do an unlawful act he is bound by the acts of the others—their receiving the stolen goods is his receiving the stolen goods. There is enough in this case to excite suspicion in that direction, at least, These "fences" are established. They are going on. It is known what they are for, but I cannot say that, in my opinion, there is enough evidence in this case to exist is such as confederacy as that. There is enough certainty, however, to excite suspicion if not alarm.

I do not know that I have left unanswered, substantially, any of the prayers that have been offered on the part of the defense or on the part of the prosecution.

The law is an exact thing. Criminal law especially is an exact thing. Criminal law especially is an exact thing. It will not swell, expand, and contract to accommodate fancies, but it is an indissoluble rule and regulation. Here these men are indicted for receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen. It is a principle of the law that the receiving of the stolen goods mu

The following were the prayers on behalf of the prosecution:

If the jury find from the evidence that the two defendants were acting together, both had possession of the property, then it was a joint possession, and it is not necessary to find that both had actual and it is not necessary to find that both had actual possession.

If the jury find from the evidence that the defendant Flinder, pursuant to an understanding with the defendant McEifresh, did approach the owner of the watch for the purpose of obtaining a reward, and for the purpose of making profit for himself and said McEifresh out of the larceny, and that either, or both, had possession of the watch, awaiting the receipt of the reward, knowing it to have been stolen, then they are guilty. That accomplices in receiving stolen goods are only those who receive jointly, and that where one receiver secures from a previous receiver, then they are not joint receivers or accomplices. Confirmation, when required, may be of the facts and circumstances in proof in the case, and it is not necessary that the corroboration should be direct. it is not not be direct.

EXCITEMENT ON THE AVENUE.

In Which an Elderly Gentleman, His Wife, Her Escort, a Cane, and a Herdic Figure.

About 9:30 o'clock last night, the neighborhood of Pennsylvania avenue and Tenth street was thrown into a state of excitement by an elderly gentleman, who discovered his unfaithful wife with another man. The wife and her escort left of Harvey's and quickly entered a herdic cab. The driver started his team, but had only reached the middle of the street when he was hailed by the old gentleman and stopped his horse. The latter then stepped up to the vehicle, and after pulling the door open, accused his wife of infidelity. He then addressed pretty severe language to his wife's escort, at the same time belaboring him over the head and shoulders with a cane. The escort sprang out of the herdic and started briskly down Tenth street, while the husband entered the cab and gave the driver directions to drive to a certain house in the most by an elderly gentleman, who discovered his ons to drive to a certain house in the most fashionable part of the city. The affair was witnessed by quite a large crowd. The driver afterward stated that he had been engaged by the man and woman while coming down Capitol hill. He thought the name of the husband was Abbott, and that he resides on Sixteenth street. He also remarked that the pair quarreled all the way home, and that Mr. Abbott in entering his residence announced his intention of either whipping his wife or getting a divorce.
